You are invited to join me in celebrating my [friend's, sister's, etc...] new venture as an Independent Coordinator for Zola: The Art of Living Green.

Come and enjoy some organic wine, local brew, tasty morsels, and find out how you can change the world - by shopping!

I would like to invite you all to a VERY important party, (and a fun one, too!). One of my friends has just become an Independent Coordinator for Zola: The Art of Living Green. Zola offers environmentally responsible products that we all can afford.

I have never hosted a "products party" before, but I, (as I hope each of you do, too) feel that this is a very worthy cause. Please come and enjoy food, drink, and camaraderie with others who want to make a positive change.

I really hope everyone can make it to this important event!

Did you know that women, in their role as care givers, are responsible for buying 80% of household goods? This means we have a great deal of influence in the economy as consumers. We are a major factor in bringing about positive change!

Join us for a glass of wine, dessert, and a chance to learn about some of the small changes you can make to improve your life and the environment. You will also have the opportunity to purchase high-quality, affordable, environmentally friendly, and socially responsible products.

What if we could change the future by shopping? Every time we shop, it is like casting a vote with our dollars. This means we have a great deal of influence in the economy as consumers. We are a major factor in bringing about positive change!

Join us as we take a look at a day in the life of an average American consumer for a step-by-step guide to some of the easy and affordable changes we can make to help the environment.

Since the focus is on environmental awareness, it would be great if you could use reusable plates and glasses rather than disposable items if you plan to serve food. Here are some ideas below for bite size snacks, so that you do not have to use utensils.
